Natural Beauty

Santa Lucia Preserve brings conservation, community and culture together, along with a heartening golf experience

Just a few minutes from Carmel-by-the-Sea in the soul-stirring wilds of California, the 20,000-acre Santa Lucia Preserve holds nearly 300 families, fortunate members and guests who live and play among roughly 100 miles of hiking trails, multiple microclimates, and one of the Monterey Peninsula's best-kept golf secrets. Meandering among 365 acres of towering oaks and rolling savannas, around wetlands and across seasonal streams framed by the majestic Santa Lucia Mountains, The Preserve Golf Club showcases the area's rich natural beauty with a Tom Fazio design and careful placement of homesites. The development footprint comprises just 10% of The Preserve, a sanctuary that's complemented by ocean views, green design and sustainable building practices. The on-site Ranch Club and its Spanish Colonial-style Hacienda offers fresh farm-to-table cuisine sourced from an organic on-site garden (and overnight accommodations for guests) while a cutting-edge fitness center, tennis courts, swimming pools, an equestrian center and more all add to the high quality of life here. To live at The Preserve is to become a steward of the land for future generations—responsible, beautiful and enjoying a truly memorable golf experience.
